Cinematic Chatter

By Malcolm Miller

For sheer beauty in coloring, such as the artist would glory in, if he could capture them on his palette, "Cobra Woman" matches anything in artistic photography I've ever witnessed. Its beauty at times is breath taking. In fact all of the scenic beauty of the South Seas is captured in the lens of the technicolor camera and placed on film.

The cast lists Jon Hall, Marie Montez, Sabu, Lon Chaney, Elizabeth Riden and Samuel S. Hinds in the principal roles and a host of lesser performers who do excellent work, a bevy of beautiful girls and some interesting animals and, of course, King Cobra himself. The cobra is the gentleman that will put the clutch in your throat. Miss Montez does a dual role, sisters, one is good and the other is bad and both are in love with Jon Hall. Your imagination will tell you that the "sinker" could fade in order to get rid of the good girl and get the man for herself. But, children, she is fooled in her nasty work and the good girl does get the nice guy at the finish. Sabu is seen in this one in the usual role of go-between who messes up a lot of the romance with his foolishness, but he turns out to be the "usual" happy-go-lucky fellow who delivers the girl into the hands of his friend.

It goes without saying you will like this picture. As I announced some time back we were going to start playing ball with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and that May would see the first bookings from this company, so it has happened. As you will remember we have not booked a picture from this company (outlets of short subjects) in several years. Now it is happened. I am proud to announce that on Tuesday-Wednesday you are going to see your first feature from this company in all these years. This picture is "Meet The People" which was directed by Victor Powell, Lucille Ball, Virginia O'Brien, Bert Lahr, June Allyson, Johanna Boyle, Victor Borge, Vaughn Monroe, and His Band and Spike and The City Slickers. The story is a plumb good 'un. It will be a pleasure to welcome some of these players back into our theatres.

Second picture up on this program is "My Buddy" which lists Donald Barry, Ruth Terry, Lynn Roberts, Alexander Gramach, Emma Dunn, John Lel, George E. Stone, Jonathan Hale, Ray Walker, Joe Devlin and Matt McHugh. The picture should give you a picture so much so I won't recommend it... But, with this Metro on the bill how can you go wrong?

Thursday-Friday list double features with "Girl Rich" the first one up. This one stars Frances Langford and "Wally Brown and features Allen Carney, Vera Vance and Robert Mitchum with a lot of other players we don't recognize.

Story is about a vaudeville troupe back in 1919 in San Francisco, which was at that time one of the hot spots of the West, with California seething with all manner and types of people out there to seek gold. Of course there will be plenty of action and some good comedy situations which will make this picture a delightful show for you.

Second picture up is "The Call of the South" which stars Frances Langford and "Wally Brown and features Janet Martin, Allen Lane, Bill Henry, Roy Barcroft.

This is the story of a fugitive from justice who locates on a French possession in the South Seas and sets himself up in business. He lives here for some time when the F.B.I. come looking for another escapee and find him. He is captured after a fight and returned to face justice. It is very interesting.

Saturday brings "Beyond The Last Frontier" which stars James Dew and Smiley Burnette and is said to be a new picture with this pair starred. From all press reports it is a very good show.

With 30 let me say to those who believe they have supported the boys enough with the small pinches of money they have slammed into war bonds.

Those boys are sweating their guts out and there, witnessing the most horrible sights ever imagined by man, seeing putrid death on all sides of them, sleeping with it, eating with it. What Are You Doing? Buy War Bonds!!!

See you at the movies—Mal.

cial conferences at Casablanca, Cairo, Teheran, and the Crimea. He watered the soil of international cooperation and planted in it the seeds of enduring peace for all peoples.

This marvelous, mighty man had prepared the blue-print of permanent peace. He was in a fair way to erect from it a lasting structure at San Francisco. He had already planned a message for that momentous meeting. Why he was not spared for that great and sorely needed service at San Francisco is something I can't understand. Incurable, indeed, are the depredations of fate. No man ever had a better and brighter opportunity to bring the priceless blessing of lasting peace to a war-weary world. He was taken just when we needed him most to make the peace permanent.

No death was ever so timely. I cannot help fearing that President Roosevelt's death means that the blood of countless millions of innocent victims of another "war" will again run red with war.

The world never owned so much to any man. When the new barbarians of Germany set out to reduce civilization to ruins, President Roosevelt was the first statesman to challenge the cruel killers. No friend of freedom can ever forget the "Quarantine Speech" against aggressors, which he made at Chicago in 1937. He clearly, forswore and foretold the brutal nature of the Nazis, and he took timely steps to repel the ruthless killers. But for President Roosevelt, millions of Americans very likely would be in German concentration camps or in mass graves, and the cities of our country, a charred pile of ruins. A hundred years from now people will kneel in gratitude to God that Roosevelt was here to lead America and the world in their darkest hour.

It is a cruel and bitter irony that he was not permitted to witness the great victory he did so much to bring about. But it is some consolation to the millions who loved and admired President Roosevelt that, like Moses, he looked across Jordan to the Promised Land and then died, he was spread long enough to see ultimate victory not far off.

Out beyond the stars amid the sunbeams that beam perennially in the garden of the immortals, may his great soul find the rest which was denied his weary body here on earth. In hope and prayer of one who loved him in life and mourns him in death.

dent, after very careful analysis, that the rate of growth in population, which was interrupted by the war, especially in southeastern Florida, will be even greater in the post-war period.

The company's expansion program calls for building nearly 800 miles of transmission and distribution lines, about 500 of which are new rural line extensions to serve farms and other customers in rural areas. All of this construction is dependent upon the availability of materials and it was pointed out that if anything happened which would release materials for general building construction all of the company's present estimates might have to be greatly increased.

Included in the program is the construction of a 24,000 horsepower steam electric plant at Sarasota upon which work has already started, and which is expected to be in operation this winter. The combined capacity of this plant and the West Palm Beach plant exceeds the requirements of the company's entire statewide system at the peak of the winter season in 1924.

The tremendous size of the New Rivers Steam Plant is hard for the layman to visualize. One interesting calculation made by engineers is that 90 million gallons of water a day will be required to operate the condensing and cooling system when operating at full capacity. This is about twice the amount used for all purposes in the Greater Miami area during a peak day. The plant is expected to consume about 17,000,000 gallons of fuel oil yearly.

"Our analysis indicates a bright industrial future for the state," said Mr. Smith. "Florida, under emergency war conditions, has proven to be the natural gateway for the post-war period to the rich markets in the Caribbean, South America and South Africa. Industry is in the move. Factories migrate to markets and insofar as competition with domestic manufactured goods is concerned, the point of export is the point of sale. These air cargo potentials will be of high dollar value per pound. They will be the type of products which require high degrees of skill in their manufacture and consequently add most to the wealth of the communities in which they are made."

"The rate of building construction in the post-war period, of the new and modern establishments and factories, will probably be greater than at any time in the history of our state."

"Our company and its system were put to the test during the war to provide promptly large blocks of power wherever called for by our Army and Navy. We are proud of our war record and of the men and women who have given so extensively of their time and talents in meeting these war emergencies. But we will have to meet even more severe problems to keep ahead—as we must—of the rapid development of our state in the postwar years. Probably no other single item of service will enter more intimately and directly into such expansion as will electric service."
